VEGETATIVE CYCLE
It was an unusual season due to climatic and hydric factors, which caused drops both in production and an anticipation of the harvest from ten and thirty days. For the ninth consecutive year, there were few snowfalls that further restricted the provision of water for irrigation in the summer season. Spring was cold in September and October, causing partial frosts and landslides. The high temperatures in the months of November, December and March reduced the size of the berries and anticipated the ripeness of the grapes. Because of this, it was necessary to harvest in a very short period of nine weeks when normally it is done in twelve. Despite the high maximum and minimum temperatures, a very good average temperature was recorded in March, which contributed significantly to quality. It was a harvest with normal rainfall distributed throughout the cycle. Thanks to the good summer temperatures and a considerable thermal amplitude, the grapes reached a correct maturity.

AGING
Aged in 2nd and 3rd used oak for 10 months, for 50% of the wine.

TASTING NOTES
A greenish yellow wine. It has delicate notes of white flowers, citrus, fresh cut grass and minerals. The oak is very well integrated, giving it volume and texture on the palate. It is a fresh and complex wine.
